FATALLY INJURED IN FALL OVER CLIFF

Peter Rasmussen, 50, of San Francisco, met death last Sunday when he plunged head first from a 100-foot cliff at Pedro Point, in San Mateo county, the accident being witnessed by two companions, who had gone with the unfortunate man to Pedro Point on a mussel gathering expedition. Mr. Rasmussen's companions were Wesley Joost and Oswald Hermann, of San Francisco.

In describing the accident, Mr. Joost said: "We were walking in single file down a narrow trail to where we expected to find the mussels. We heard a yell from Rasmussen, and turned around just in time to see him falling, head first down the face of the cliff. He never moved after he struck the rocks at the bottom."

The body was recovered by a crew of fifteen men under the direction of Constable S. A. Landini, of Colma. Their perilous task took more than an hour. Constable Landini said that Rasmussen's death was clearly accidental, and released Joost and Hermann. The body was taken to the Lasswell undertaking parlors, in Daly City, pending word from Rasmussen's only known relative, a sister living in the east. An inquest will be held next Tuesday.

MERCHANTS OPPOSE HANDBILL NUISANCE

Notwithstanding the light attendance, there was an important meeting of the Daly City Merchants' Association last Wednesday evening at the City Hall Auditorium.

Among other matters which came before the merchants was a petition which is being circulated, asking the City Council to pass an ordinance regulating the distribution of handbills, circulars, etc., in Daly City, advertising merchandises of outside stores, and cluttering up the front steps or yard of every home. The proposed ordinance is similar to the one now in force in South San Francisco. Such an ordinance, it is believed, will be a great protection and benefit to Daly City and its business men.

Considerable time was consumed in discussing what will undoubtedly be the greatest basket picnic ever held by the people of Daly City in any organization. The popularity of the annual picnic of the Daly City Merchants has attracted the attention of the whole of San Mateo county, and parts of San Francisco, and it has been the custom to invite all of the officials of the county, and the membership of such organizations as the Excelsior Merchants' Association, and the Mission Street Merchants' Association, to attend our picnic. It is predicted that this year the picnic will draw the largest crowd in the history of the organization.

The date has been set for Sunday, July 22, at the usual place, Oak Cove Park, San Mateo. Make reservations of this date now, and enjoy a real outing.

W. H. CLAY, Recording Secretary.

MOTHER MINERVA AIDS IN RAISING SCHOOL FUNDS

Mother Minerva, widely known San Mateo county figure who lives in "Minerva's fort" at Colma and reported to be 102 years old, was among principal speakers at an entertainment at Millbrae last Friday night to raise funds for scholarships in the Millbrae and Lomita Park schools.

Mother Minerva recited an original poem on the American flag. The San Mateo Scouts band and minstrel troupe entertained. Lomita Park Girl Scouts added to the program. Speakers included Miss Pansy J. Abbott, county school superintendent; W. H. Eddy, San Mateo high school trustee; C. C. Brown, H. Bell, and others.

Mother Minerva exhibited a chair presented to her as a Christmas present by Abraham Lincoln. She said she plans to present the chair to the Lincoln Memorial at Springfield, Ohio. It was made in 1834, she said.

HIT AND RUN DRIVER DRAWS YEAR IN JAIL

Found guilty of hit and run driving by a jury before Superior Judge Louis H. Ward, Chester Babo, of Daly City, was sentenced last Saturday to one year in the county jail. Testimony showed that Babo crashed into an automobile driven by William McKay, of 130 San Bruno avenue, last December. Two children riding with McKay were injured.

Twelve injured on Highway
Five San Francisco residents were slightly hurt on the Skyline boulevard early Monday to bring the total of San Mateo county traffic victims to twelve for 48 hours.

WORK PROJECT AT THE HIGH SCHOOL

The Jefferson Union high school is to have a baseball diamond comparable to its football field, which is one of the best in California.

On Monday, fifteen men started a project of grading under the San Mateo Emergency Relief Administration. The plans call for a cut of two feet and a half on the entire infield. The dirt thus removed will be used to grade up the outfield, with the result that the entire grounds will be almost completely level.

Principal James Ferguson has had this project before the County Committee for the past two months, but it was not until last week that final approval was given by the higher authorities. One of the obstacles that stood in the way was the lack of equipment with which to do the work. Through a direct appeal to the State Relief Administration last week, permission was granted the high school to use the C. W. A. equipment which was stored in the county warehouse.

Mr. Ferguson, in commenting on the project, stated that it was the desire of the high school trustees to improve the grounds as much as possible and at the same time provide work for the unemployed men in this part of the county. Some of the projects carried on under the C. W. A. were criticized, he says, because they appeared to be of less value than the money expended. Many such projects had to be hastily gotten up to put men to work under the rush orders given by the Federal Administration. Now care is exercised in the choice of projects and the planning of them with the end in view not only of giving men employment but also of giving to the public value for the money spent—money which will have to be repaid later by the taxpayers.

Mr. Ferguson represents the northern part of the county as a member of the San Mateo County Emergency Relief Administration. His policy as a member of that administration is to help give to every man in San Mateo county a chance to work for a living. "The working men of California," Mr. Ferguson says, "do not want something for nothing. They do not ask for the dole—they want work. And it is the policy of the County Administration to see that they get work on projects that will be of value to the general public when completed."

Mr. Ferguson believes that within a short time there will be projects started in this end of the county that will give employment to every able bodied man now out of work in this district.

Jefferson High Student Killed in Auto Crash

Glenn Emery, 18, Bellevue avenue, a student at Jefferson Union high school, was fatally injured when his car collided at the intersection of Steiner and McAllister streets, Thursday of last week, with one driven by Charles Ferrari, 35, 2260 Alum Rock avenue, San Jose. With Ferrari was Ruth Carlson, 32, who was booked as intoxicated. Ferrari and his companion were en route to Sacramento. Thomas Long, who was with Emery, was not seriously injured.

When the two cars collided the impact was terrific. The crash was heard for blocks.

Young Emery was pinned in his car as it struck against a telephone pole. The remains of the unfortunate young man were removed to the undertaking establishment of J. Godeau.

The funeral was conducted from Godeau's last Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Interment was in Olivet Memorial Park. Young Emery's untimely death is deeply mourned by his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Emery, with whom he made his home. A coroner's jury in San Francisco held Charles Ferrari, the driver of the other car, to blame, charging excessive speed at the crossing.

IMPORTANT DEVELOPMENTS IN UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Developments in San Mateo county's unemployment relief program reached an interesting standpoint last Monday.

It was revealed that trained social service workers who would investigate applications from the jobless will be used in administering the unemployment relief program in the county. This was agreed upon by the San Mateo board of supervisors, Director Sam D. Merk and the Unemployment Relief committee, which has withdrawn its resignation, it was learned.

Dr. C. V. Thompson, chairman of the supervisory board, made known the intention to call in trained social service workers to investigate all applicants for work under the unemployment relief program.

TANFORAN'S STRIDES HELPED BY NEW YORK

By J. W. MARCHBANK

New York and San Francisco.

Racing has come back into its own on the other side of the Continent with the legalization of cash wagering, and in more ways than one the change is highly important in its bearing on the sport in our own midst. The two great cities were connected in the past in an intimate manner by the thoroughbred pastime, and those days apparently have returned with even more force than ever. Westerners will take their gallopers to the Metropolitan circuit to try conclusions with the best on those tracks and Easterners will return the compliment by sending out fleet ones to Tanforan.

When racing flourished at Tanforan in the period of the close of the last century and the beginning of the present, many of the handicap performers were owned by residents of New York. The sportsmen liked to be in California in the winter and while here got a lot of fun out of witnessing their horses in competition with the "native sons and daughters" of this part of the blood horse kingdom. Waring, Vesuvius, The Lady, Advance Guard, Vulcan, Gonfalon, Joe Frey, Canmore, and others come to mind as starters in the final running of the San Francisco Handicap at Tanforan in the "ancient" times. A few months later their names were prominent in the lists of eligibles for features in the East.

"Class" is what I am seeking, and before long I am confident I'll achieve my object. The whole country is talking right now of the success of the sport at Tanforan and that widespread report will assist in bringing about the condition that is already on its way. Good horses will make good sport and the material is coming not only from our own rapidly expanding haras but from the breeding paddocks of Kentucky, Maryland, and Virginia.

In preparation for the "invasion" we must be liberal. Our visitors will derive a tremendous thrill out of wagering, and one thing we must do is to reduce the commission on the pari mutuel pools to give them the fairest of "breaks." Nine per cent will be sufficient—six to the racing association, one and one-half to the state, and one and one-half to a big race purse fund.

ROYCE SPORTS ARE SLUGFEST LOSERS

The Boldeman Chocolates defeated the Royce Sports' team last Sunday on the Base Hospital grounds at Palo Alto, 13 to 8.

The game was a swatfest, with the number of hits being pretty evenly divided.

Errors and two long home runs in the first and third innings with men on put the Royce team on the short end, 7 to 2.

Randall, starting pitcher for Sport Shop boys, was relieved by Creighton Davies in the third inning and though he pitched good ball, errors by his teammates kicked away any chance for the ball game. White, pitcher for the Chocolates, was hit hard also but his support never faltered.

For the Chocolate boys the hitting of Laveroni, Brousseau and Fontana featured, while Walsh, Pierotti and Cameron did good work for the Royce boys.

A large crowd of outside visitors witnessed the game.

WOODROW WILSON-VISTA GRANDE P-T. A. MEET MAY 8

The Woodrow Wilson-Vista Grande P-T. A. will hold its board meeting next Tuesday afternoon at 2 P. M. in the Woodrow Wilson school. The following Tuesday will be the regular meeting. The reports from the district convention and state convention will be given at that time.

Please keep these dates in mind and attend these meetings. G. J. H.

TANFORAN TO AID AMERICAN LEGION

One of the most spectacular events ever held at Tanforan will be staged Sunday, when the track management will hold a benefit program for the American Legion. The day will be American Legion day and the feature race will be the American Legion Handicap.

Both San Mateo county and San Francisco Legion posts are co-operating on the program with J. W. Marchbank, director general of the track. The proceeds of the day will be handed over to the Legion as a fund for the Legion's state convention to be held in San Francisco during August. It is expected the day will be the greatest the San Bruno oval has ever seen.

In addition to an attractive racing program, in which the finest thoroughbreds at the track will compete, the Legion will have several events of its own to offer. Post drum and bugle corps, colors and special units will participate in the Legion's part of the program, and the 40 and 8, playground organization of the Legion, is expected to take a prominent part in the affair.

San Mateo county Legion posts have named a special committee of their prominent members to take charge of this county's participation in the Legion Day program. Thousands of veterans, their families and friends are preparing to visit the track Sunday for what is expected to prove the largest day since the track opened. Preparations have been made at the track to handle a record crowd.

Last Sunday nearly 20,000 persons gathered at Tanforan for Shrine Derby Day, when the proceeds of the day went to help the Shrine's widespread welfare program. The thousands cheered the exceptionally fine racing events, and the day itself was a marked success.

Tomorrow (Saturday) Tanforan will offer as the feature of the day's program, the Baldwin Handicap, a five-furlong race for two-year-olds with a stake of $1,000 added. The favorite youngsters at the track are to match speed in this event.

STATION ATTENDANT BADLY SCALDED BY STEAM

Eugene G. Kalinin, 21, attendant at the Associated station at School street in Colma, was scalded by steam from a boiling automobile radiator last Monday afternoon. As Kalinin lifted the cap from the radiator a burst of steam showered the upper part of his body.

He was taken to Villa Sanitarium, where he was treated for burns of the face, neck and arms.

CALL OF ALASKA HEARD BY YOUTH

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

Confirmation of my views expressed in my booklet, "Gold Mining and Unemployment," comes in from every side by men conversant with conditions in the North. As I pointed out, there is an ample livelihood in the five hundred thousand square miles of Alaska for at least six million of the right type of youth and middle-aged men. The territory can not be matched anywhere for wealth in both mineral and agricultural products.

Only the other day in glancing over the columns of that authoritative and breezy publication, "The Alaska Weekly," I noted that James M. Stevens, veteran prospector of Alaska, at a Seattle luncheon club, said:

"Although Alaska has returned more than a thousand fold the amount paid for its purchase, the wealth of that vast storehouse has hardly been touched."

As I have emphasized again and again, inexperienced men must not be allowed to go into the field. Young men going into the highly promising land should be taught the rudiments of prospecting before starting out, so they can be self-supporting. The hardy kind of adventurer will get along all right.

Right here in California, too, immense treasures in the yellow metal await removal. As was recently stated by W. W. Bradley, State Mineralogist, prospects are the production for this year will be as large, is not larger, than last year. He estimates the value of the output, at the present price of thirty-five dollars an ounce, will be in the neighborhood of $21,000,000. The estimated output would be the highest since 1915, when it was $22,500,000. A record for the state was established in 1852 with an output valued at $81,250,000.

Speed of mining operations will depend a good deal on the amount of capital invested in equipment and development and on the number of men employed in the various enterprises.

Some more figures from expert Bradley:

"It is conservatively estimated that there is a total of at least $600,000,000 (at the old value of gold) available in old gravel channel deposits that can be worked by some low cost method of mining. Gold from veins and lodes is another matter. To date possibly $800,000,000 has been extracted from veins and probably we'll get as much more from such sources."

It is interesting to note the quantity of silver needed in event a suggested base of seventy per cent gold and thirty per cent silver is made for the country's monetary structure.

The latest statement of the Treasury shows the gold base of total money stocks amounts to $7,695,087,462. The silver holdings are $841,536,115, or about eleven per cent. Were silver stocks increased to thirty per cent of the total base, the silver holdings would have to be increased to $2,560,987,073, or $1,719,450,985 more than at present.

As the coining value of an ounce of silver in silver dollars is $1.29, it can easily be figured a total of 1,332,907,720 ounces is necessary to bring the silver stock to the thirty per cent ratio.

Working out of the scheme that means so much to our silver mining industry depends upon an international agreement, which President Roosevelt is reported to favor. The wheels are in motion and before long relief may be expected for silver similar to that given to gold.

VETERAN POPPY DRIVE PLANNED

President Franklin D. Roosevelt urges all patriotic citizens to wear a Buddy Poppy on Memorial Day in a letter addressed to Commander-in-Chief Van Zandt of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States.

President Roosevelt pays a distinct tribute to the child welfare program of the V. F. W. and its efforts in behalf of disabled and needy veterans. His letter of approval is repeated:

"Every orphan deserves a chance for happiness equal to that enjoyed by the average American child. This opportunity is given to the orphans of veterans by the V. F. W. National Home at Eaton Rapids, Mich., maintained by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States."

"Proceeds from the annual sale of Buddy Poppies makes it possible for the maintenance of this orphanage. Buddy Poppies also offer a source of employment and relief for needy and disabled veterans in their home communities. For these two very good reasons, we should all wear Buddy Poppies on Memorial Day."

Should more be said? When a V. F. W. approaches you the latter part of the month don't turn him away. Purchase and wear the V. F. W. Buddy Poppy.

The post at its meeting last Friday night voted to hold its second annual picnic and appointed the committee to draft up the tentative plans to make it bigger and better this year. The committee headed by Comrade Fred Collins and his able assistants will make the day one of the most pleasant and the date and more information will be published in the near future.

The local Americanism committee composed of civic, fraternal and patriotic organizations will hold their first organization meeting in the near future. Communications are now in the mail, and it will be only a short time until it will be effectively operating in our community.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars are favoring very strongly the immediate payment of the Adjusted Compensation Certificates, sometimes referred to as the "Bonus." This is not a bonus, no more than was paid the railroads, industrial firms and individuals in 1919 to 1922 for supposed losses due to war. They were paid in cash, the veterans in I. O. U. payable in 1945. That is the only difference. If this obligation of the government is paid now, a sum of $136,481,114.04 will be available for immediate use to relieve the stagnant business conditions in California, alone. It means lots to the business man as well as the veteran. Write your Senator and urge his unequalled support of this measure. Daly City will receive its share of the cash for immediate business relief. Whether it is published or not, the unemployment is still paramount and much suffering is still being suffered.

Eleven School Districts Employ Only One Teacher

Eleven, or 35.5 per cent, of the elementary school districts in San Mateo county employed only one teacher for the school year 1932-33, according to a study of elementary school districts in California recently made by the California Taxpayers' Association from figures prepared by the California State Department of Education.

According to this report, in thirty-six of the fifty-eight counties of California, more than half the elementary school districts employed only one teacher. In Alpine county, the smallest in the state of population, each of the three elementary school districts employed only one teacher. In Shasta county, seventy-nine districts, or 90.8 per cent of the elementary school districts, employed only one teacher. In El Dorado county forty-eight, or 90.6 per cent, of all the elementary school districts employed only one teacher.

On the other extreme, San Francisco county had only one school district. Orange county had only three school districts employing but one teacher, or 7 per cent of the elementary school districts of the county. In Imperial county, only six, or 14.6 per cent of the elementary school districts employed only one teacher.

In the state of California 1,362 elementary school districts, or 49.7 per cent of all the elementary school districts of the state, employed only one teacher in 1932-33.

CLEAN SWEEP FOR V-8 CARS

The new Ford V-8 cars seem to be the speed demons of their class, according to recent results in stock car racing events. These cars made a clean sweep in both the Elgin National Stock Car Road Race at Elgin, Ill., and the 250-mile Gilmore gold cup race for stock cars at the Los Angeles Municipal Airport. Fred Frame, nationally known race driver, piloted a V-8 Ford to win first place at Elgin, and "Stubby" Stubbelfield drove the winner at Los Angeles. At Elgin, the seven first cars were Fords, and at Los Angeles, the ten first cars were Fords.

"HANDS OFF" LEGION POLICY

The San Mateo county council, American Legion, headed by R. A. Rapsey as commander and comprising all Legion posts in the county, at its last meeting affirmed the traditional "hands off" policy of the Legion in labor troubles, strikes or matters of similar nature.

Romeo Tomas, 30, Moss Beach ranch hand, was killed at 2 o'clock last Friday morning when his auto crashed a bank beside the Coast highway at the north edge of Moss Beach. Death was due to a skull fracture when the car rolled over several times. Tomas, riding alone, was trapped in the wreckage. He is believed to have gone to sleep at the wheel.

Controlling Measles

We report the following details concerning a recent measles case to show how effective are the protective measures which we recommended in a previous article.

A little girl, not quite three years of age, was discovered to have been intimately exposed to two children just breaking out with measles on Wednesday and Thursday. Efforts were made during the following week to find some convalescent serum (derived from the blood of patients just recovering from measles) but none was to be found here or in San Francisco. Therefore, the next best thing was done. This little girl was fortunate enough to have two older brothers who had had measles a few years before. About two-thirds of an ounce of their blood was withdrawn and injected into the little girl's muscles. This was done just a week after exposure. (Earlier injection would probably have prevented development of infection.) Exactly two weeks from the date of exposure, she broke out with typical measles rash. She had one day of slight fever but was not really sick at any time. Two days after the rash broke out it was fading rapidly and she was enjoying life thoroughly. At the end of the week from the time the rash appeared, all signs of it had vanished and her measles was a thing of the past without her having missed a meal or had any of the common complications. In the meantime, her little neighbors who came down with measles about the same time, were all sick for a week or ten days and some of them longer. Was this protection worth while? Ask your doctor.

The Health Officer would appreciate hearing of any similar cases where convalescent serum (or protective blood) has been used.

Business of the Nation Continues to Improve

Business in general has continued the improvement that started with Christmas buying last December. During the last two months there has been a pronounced rise in manufacturing output, accompanied by quite substantial gains in employment and payrolls.

Excellent signs are also observed in the great agricultural areas—a recent report placing farmers' cash income at 63 per cent above that of a year ago. As often happens at this time of the year, the increase in distributions of products has been less than the increase in their production. Retail prices have moved slightly upward.

Governmental expenditures—which may fairly be called artificial business stimulants—are still an imposing factor in the industrial picture. They have been declining, but they are still far greater than in normal periods. As a result, any retrenchment, such as elimination of the bureau now providing relief jobs, would necessarily be followed by a drop in the business indices.

The Oregon University is planning to produce "heavy water" on a big scale soon. From six quarts to two gallons of the heavy water can be extracted from the 10,000 gallon water tank they are installing.

V. W. F. POPPY DRIVE

The thirteenth annual Buddy Poppy sale will start officially on May 26, to last through Decoration day. To our friends and comrades, we ask you to buy a Buddy Poppy, so that you may "honor the dead by helping the living." The proceeds from the Buddy Poppy sale is used exclusively for relief work, not alone for our disabled buddies, but for their needy families in our community.

The members of the Post and Auxiliary turned out in full force last Wednesday evening to further plans for one of the greatest Poppy drives ever to be held in this section. Your co-operation will be appreciated.

President Ireton was an invited guest at the birthday party given by White Squadron Auxiliary, Wednesday of last week. The affair was held at Berney's in San Francisco. The tables were cleverly decorated with battleships and blue and white flowers. The ladies were presented lovely corsages, and each guest was given a sailor hat. Sisters Leffman and Williams, from Astor Auxiliary, Oakland, and Sisters Hubbard, Donahue and Nealy, of San Francisco, were the honored department officers.

A dinner will be served by the ladies of the Auxiliary next Tuesday evening, from 6 to 8, at the home of Sister Stella Bedford, 106 Broad street, chairman of the committee. A whist and Bingo game will be held after the dinner. The proceeds are to be used to send delegates to the department convention. Everybody come and do your part. A good dinner and pleasant evening is assured all who come.

The Sewing Circle met last Wednesday at the home of Sister Erratt. After a most delightful afternoon the hostess served refreshments to the ladies. Those who enjoyed Sister Erratt's hospitality were Sisters Frazier, Pechenino, Gaitor, Beckett, Lewis, Ireton, Bedford and Dorn.

PRINTING RATE ISSUE BEFORE COUNTY BOARD

A controversy over county printing costs between a committee of the grand jury and the publishers of San Mateo county was given another airing at the weekly meeting of the board of supervisors last Monday.

The board decided to lay the entire question over for another week, at which time, it was agreed, they would dispose of the troublesome question.

The publishers, representing the fourteen legal publications of the county, filed a communication with the board accompanied by a resolution establishing printing rates. The publishers stated they had worked conscientiously to maintain harmony with the grand jury and to comply with the recommendations made in its last official report.

Two investigations are under way at San Rafael as a result of the San Quentin prison break of two convicts, who were slain by San Bernardino county deputy sheriffs after they had released two San Rafael policemen who they had kidnaped and held for 30 hours as hostages during a wild flight to southern California.

JEFFERSON SCHOOL DISTRICT TO HAVE NEW BUILDING

Last Monday evening the trustees of the Jefferson School District held a special meeting at which time the bids for the new Manual Arts Building were opened.

This building is a much needed improvement and will be a credit to the school district and the community.

The pupils taking manual training, domestic science, and sewing have been using the basement of the Woodrow Wilson school, it being necessary to use artificial light in the sewing room.

The school board has long felt that a separate building for this purpose was needed, but hesitated to call upon the taxpayers to bond themselves for the money needed.

This year it has been found that through the economical administration of the district, there is enough money on hand to erect this building, on Santa Barbara avenue, next to the Woodrow Wilson school, without any additional cost to the taxpayers and it will also provide employment to a number of our people during its construction.

Mr. Riley, being the lowest bidder, the contract was awarded to him. The architect being Mr. Alfred Roller.

PILOT KEN NORMAN was standing outside the field office when the car drove up.

It was a big coupe, glittering with nickel.

A pale-faced man got out of the driver's side and came forward.

Beyond him Norman glimpsed a woman who was slender and blond.

Both wore smoked glasses.

"Can we charter a plane here?" the man asked.

"I reckon you can," Norman said. "Where do you want to go?"

"Just down to Yuma, Ariz., and return—short stopover. But I want fancy flying."

The pilot shrugged and turned toward the office. "Come on in," he suggested; "you can talk to the chief."

He did likewise, and felt new astonishment.

Bramwell's position was scarcely changed; he gave no sign of movement.

Then the girl was speaking again in a low, contrite tone: "Perhaps you'll be angry, but I wanted to fly some more and I knew when he woke up we'd have to turn back, so—"

"Turn back?" Norman echoed; "but isn't he—weren't you—I mean, what about your elopement?"

Thelma looked blank for an instant, then broke into silvery laughter.

"So that's what you thought! Heavens—such an idea! Why, this was just a little test. Mr. Bramwell and I are appearing together in the air picture, and neither of us had ever been up. So we decided to try it out in private first. He felt sick right away and started drinking brandy, but—"

her voice became mischievous—"I'd put a sleeping powder in it."

Now it was Norman who laughed, heartily and with an odd sense of relief.

At last he said: "Well, that's certainly one on me—and on him, incidentally. But what was this you just said about my being angry?"

She dropped her eyes and hesitated a second before answering: "Why, when I saw this town I thought how nice it would be to stop here and put him on a train, or something—then we could go on flying. So I just pushed that little trigger to see what would happen, and it worked."

Norman looked where she was pointing and suddenly swore out loud. The contact switch was off!

A brief pause; then, "Are you very mad?" Thelma Moore asked timidly.

"No," said Norman; "I'm just wondering."

"Wondering what?"

He faced her with a rueful grin.

"Wondering," he repeated, "how anyone could be so darned cute and so all-fired crazy."

"Must be a clogged gas line," he told her. "I'll have to make a dead-stick landing."

He looked down—and a breath of glad relief escaped him.

By some lucky chance, a town lay beneath them instead of desert.

Moreover, it had an airport; the name Belmont across the hangar roof was clearly visible. Norman remembered it—a little place near the northern Arizona border.

He nosed the ship down, circling widely.

In a moment they were less than five hundred feet up. He straightened her out, heading into the wind, and took the final drop.

His calculation and timing had been perfect.

Wheels touched earth twenty yards inside the field's boundary.

One sharp jolt, a series of lessening bumps, and then they were gliding to an easy stop.

"Oh, that was thrilling!" the girl cried without a trace of unsteadiness; "and you did it so beautifully. Thank you!"

Norman stopped in the middle of a relaxing stretch to stare at her.

"What do you mean?" he queried.

The shy expression returned to Thelma Moore's face and she cast a swift look behind.

He did likewise, and felt new astonishment.

Bramwell's position was scarcely changed; he gave no sign of movement.

Use of Bait in Fishing
First Adopted by Fish

While catching fish with bait is an ancient occupation which men have been pursuing since very early times, fish themselves began it long before any man existed, states Alfred C. Weed, assistant curator of fishes at the Chicago Field museum.

Angler-fishes are found in all seas, from the edge of the surf to extremely great depths. In keeping with their extensive distribution the angler-fishes show great variations in form, but are all alike in certain structural features. All have side fins developed and used as legs and feet. Curiously, what would normally be considered front legs are behind, and what would correspond to hind legs are in front; that is, the ventral (hind leg) fins are under the throat, and the pectoral (foreleg or arm) fins are near the tail.

Strange of all, those fishes have on the head an organ consisting of a slender rod with a fleshy part at its tip used as a bait. The fishes do their angling after the Eskimo fashion rather than that of the white man. The Eskimo moves a piece of ivory in the water and when a trout comes to look at it, strikes with his spear. The angler-fish waves its bait like a flag. When some small fish or crab comes to inspect it an immense mouth opens and swallows the victim.

Some of the angler-fishes have long fish-rods with strangely formed baits. Many of the baits are luminous to attract their prey in the darkness of the ocean depths. Often the bait of the angler-fishes looks like a worm. The colors of the fishes, and their irregular outline, usually blend in their surroundings, such as stones on the sea bottom covered with growths of plants or animals, commonly called "moss," so that apart from their bait these submarine Izaak Waltons are practically invisible.

In moving from one place to another these fish usually travel by climbing about through the coral with their so-called legs, rather than swimming.

Bats Are Not Blind

Contrary to common belief, bats are not blind. They possess very good eyes, which, however, are often hidden in the fur on the face to the extent that they are not readily visible. In addition to eyesight, however, a bat possesses very keen sensory nerves in its wings which enable it to fly about in pitch black without striking any object which may be in its vicinity.

Fashion Takes to Lavish Pleating

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WHAT'S news? Pleating, if you please, just miles and miles of it clambering up and down and around fashionable dresses and blouses and wraps. Seems as if everything pleatable is being pleated. Why, even the newest straw hats have their brims pleated, while this season's smartest gloves take unto themselves wide pleated flared cuffs. And have you seen those cunning little shoulder capes which are simply a mass of tier-upon-tier of fine pleatings, either lace or ribbon, or whatnot?

As to pleated neckwear and accessories there's no end to the frothy, billowy, lively and pert little pleatings which are enmeshing about throat and shoulders and arms and wrists, at the same time ranging themselves up and down blouse fronts under the guise of Jabots.

However, these little pleatings are but a mere prologue to the deluge of more pretentious pleatings which are rapidly descending upon modern fashionland. The real drama of pleatings begins with the new skirt-depth pleats which are being worked skillfully into spreading trains and graceful panels and winged effects and such. In one or two instances of Paris evening modes the entire skirt has been pleated in soft Grecian sculptural lines.

In the lovely dinner gown created of a heavy sheer in a rich orange tone, as worn by the standing figure in the accompanying illustration, Patou achieves the sprightly back movement which is so featured this season, via pleated and stiffened winglike effects which develop into floor-length pleated panels at each side. A little matching pleated cape sums up the situation with infinite grace.

When Paris couturiers decide to make pleating their theme they pleat lavishly. Especially is this penchant for pleating expressed in evening and party frocks which are fashioned of stiffened net or lace or sheer mouseline de sole. These dainty gowns which so eloquently bespeak the return of the truly feminine mode fairly bristle with tiers and tiers of sprightly frills and ruffles formed of pleatings.

Not that evening fashions have a monopoly on pleated fantasies, not at all. Just to demonstrate how cleverly pleating used in a trimming way is entering into the daytime mode, we present in the picture a very charming sports frock made of a lightweight woolen which might be in any of the delectable pastel shades which are on the new color card, dusty pink for instance or aqua blue or in one of the very recent yellowish hues. As a matter of fact the original of the model pictured is in an attractive gray. The self-fabric pleating describes the new shoulder and neckline silhouette.

Now that fashion is in such a decided mood for pleating there are rumors in the air that the all-around pleated skirt for daytime wear is due for a revival. The few models which have been shown are tactfully worked with the thought in mind to preserve slender figure-lining lines to the knee where the pleats throw off all restraint and flare as much as they please. This is accomplished by flatly stitching the pleats down at the top. It is said that this type of skirt is destined to become very important in connection with the long tunic blouse which has "arrived" in smart circles.

NEW SHOULDER LINE
By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The print frock topped with a full length coat in solid tone is a fashion favorite this season. The costume pictured is a Schiaparelli model. The color scheme is very choice and distinctive in that the print is developed in brown, gray and beige, the woolen coat being in the latter color. The rounded shoulder line here sponsored by Schiaparelli is achieved through skillfully maneuvered tucks. The one-button fastening at the waistline is in tune with the new movement. The rolled rather than flat revers also carry a style message. The knitted hat is called "Flirt."

Pleats for Juniors

For Junior wear, the English type of frock, plaited from the shoulder and belted at the normal waistline, is a current favorite.

OXFORD SHOE LEADS LIST OF FAVORITES

The oxford shoe is queen for spring, but such a modified oxford! The two-eyete type gives the effect of a pump; when more eyelets are used there's often a strap feeling, but it's quite a new version of strapping. As formerly worn, the strap slipper seems to be out, though there are a few attractive models for women who hate to change their fashion habits too quickly.

Heels on daytime shoes are leather covered and have a dainty, airy quality, but they are firmly balanced for sane walking. On spectator sports footwear they're usually of built-up leather.

Pumps have been modified for style and comfort with a tiny gore, covered with delicate, often shaded decoration, that stretches a little over the instep.

New Coats Are Featured
by Variety of Fabrics

Variety is the spice of the spring coat array.

The wraps in which smart women will step out on those first warm days show more difference in fabric and cut than they have displayed for many seasons. They may be long or three-quarter length, buttoned from chin to hem or flying loose in the breeze, minus a single touch of fur or swathed on regal foxes.

They have one point in common, however. They are all youthful. Except for the more elaborate afternoon models they are simple in effect—if not in cut—and they hang on jaunty lines which speak of movement.

Brown Popular

Brown is becoming increasingly prominent for both daytime and evening wear. It is being featured in chiffon, mouseline de sole, taffeta, crepes and triple sheers.

Goatskin Hats

Narrow brimmed hats with pinched crowns are made of goatskin which simulates pigskin. These match up with sports coats of the same fabrics.

"Because, when the time came that we really needed to spend I wanted to be able to do it. And I think the time has come."

"I see," said Neal a little ironically. "Am I permitted to ask just how these vast sums are to be squandered, since I am to earn them?"

"Neal, darling, don't talk about it in that tone! You know how hard it was to find even this crowded little house that we could rent, and you know how uncomfortable we've been in it all winter! I want you to let me begin hunting now for a house that we can live in suitably—next winter—and buy it."

"In other words," he said dryly, "I suppose you have got your eye on one already!" And as Anne colored and gave a little laugh he laughed too and sat down beside her. "All right. Tell me about it."

"It is in Georgetown," Anne breathed excitedly, "an old house, rather badly out of repair—"

"Georgetown!" interrupted Neal contemptuously. "Why that's full of shacks and riff-raff! What on earth do you want to go there for?"

"Because the best values in real estate are there," said Anne proudly. "It used to be the court end of town and was a metropolis before Washington even existed! Now the lovely Colonial houses are being snapped up again and soon there won't be any left, people are moving out there so fast. This house I like is a big square brick one, on a corner lot, and it's a great bargain. Of course it needs a lot done to it, but—"

"But you could supervise the improvements this spring while I am leading a celibate life slaving away in Hinsboro—well—how much would it cost all told?"

"The house is only five thousand dollars, if we pay cash for it. I should have to spend at least that much more on repairs. And then of course I should have to furnish it."

"I see. You want at least fifteen thousand dollars then."

"I want more than that. I might as well tell you so, all at once."

"How much?"

"The clothes I bought in Paris are just about gone. I'll have to get new ones; I've made a list of what I need, and a thousand dollars is a conservative estimate of the cost. Then we've got to have a new motor. And I want to put the children in private schools next fall—both of them—and meantime—Anne drew her breath and went on—"I want to take them to Europe during their vacation. We can cross on a cabin boat, quite comfortably, and then we could go straight to Fontainebleau and stay there nearly all summer. The children can study French and I can go on with mine. And I want to take up my music again. It means a lot to me—music—and I have neglected it."

"I know you have, dear," said Neal. "And I thought we might have some horses and ride in the forest. Of course if you could only come too it would be perfect. But I suppose you couldn't."

"No," said Neal steadily, "of course not. I'll have to work all summer. But I do want you and the children to go."

"I'll book our passage right off, if you're willing," said Anne, "and now about the house? Could you go with me this afternoon and look it over? It isn't occupied and I have the key."

They went, immediately after dinner. The fine old house was in a sad state of dilapidation. But Neal had discernment enough to see that it was fine. The house which he and Anne had built in Hinsboro was a comfortable, nondescript, middle-class home; this, properly repaired and furnished would become a residence of individual charm and distinction—a suitable setting for a rising statesman, the dignified background for his wife.

"Suppose we drive back and get the kids and Dora and Horace?" he suggested. "If they all like it as much as we do, I guess we may just as well consider the question settled."

The day after the adjournment of congress Neal left alone for Hinsboro, facing the fact that as Anne had once stayed there without him, saving money that he might spend it, so he must now stay there without her, saving money that she might spend it. He accomplished what he set out to do, and more, in fact, his reputation as a lawyer of national and international note dated from that summer. True, he already had wide experience and a large practice upon which to build; the foundations for his fame were laid; but it was only now that he began the brilliant super-structure which was to bring him fame and fortune.

In June he permitted himself the brief luxury of going to Washington to see how the improvements on the house were advancing and to accompany his family from there to New York when they sailed on the De Grasse. He did not leave Hinsboro again until he returned to New York three months later, to welcome them back again. In the fall he returned uncomplainingly to Mrs. Simmons' cottage, the two servants accompanying Anne and Nancy and the new French maids to Georgetown.

Just before congress opened again Neal rejoined his family. Anne had done her work well; and the place in Georgetown, in its completely repaired and renovated condition, surpassed his every expectation.

As they sat before the library fire the evening of their reunion, after a delicious and beautifully served dinner, Anne commenced outlining her plans for the winter.

"I am going to start my days at home right away," she said, "that will give me time to get in three before Christmas, and I think this year we had better have an occasional Sunday tea as well. Now as to dinners. With Dora and Horace reinforced by Alphonse and Madeleine, I see no reason why we should hesitate to ask anyone here. There is just one hitch—I had a letter from Harriet saying now that we have a guest room, she feels sure we would like to have a long visit from her."

"The h—l we would!" said Neal with vehemence.

"And that she thinks she ought to do her best towards influencing congress prohibiting the sale of tobacco in any form and limiting the sale of tea and coffee. She wants to lobby against them with this as a center."

"Good G—d!" ejaculated Neal with still greater vehemence.

"Well, what can I do? I can't decline to allow your own—and your only—sister to come to our house, can I?"

"No-o-o-o, I suppose not. Better have her come at once and get her visit over with."

Anne sighed. "But my problems don't end with Harriet—my mother has written, too. She says now that we have a spare room, she is sure that we would be glad to have Sol and Sam come and stay with us and go to George Washington university."

"But if they start in a college course they will have to be here four years," said Neal, agast.

"Of course. But as far as that goes, we do not know that the legislation Harriet is interested in will be disposed of this session."

"That's true, too—well, we will just have to live in hopes. It's too bad, honey, just when you thought you had everything so nicely organized, but I guess it can't be helped."

Anne wrote to her mother saying she would have a room ready for Sol and Sam by the first of January; and she wrote to Harriet to come at once, hoping that this aggressive lady would, by some miracle, prove sufficiently adaptable to her surroundings to be at least partially assimilated by them.

Her hopes were groundless. Harriet arrived in the middle of Anne's first "At Home." The day was stormy, and she wore a "serviceable hat," large black rubbers and a dingy brown mackintosh. Relieved of these, and of her dripping umbrella, she was disclosed clad in a high-necked, white cotton "shirtwaist," and a gray whipcord skirt, which was cut in multitudinous "gores" and finished around the bottom with braid.

Anne had left her guests for a moment to see Harriet comfortably installed in the precious guest room. She was conscientiously cordial but she faltered a little.

"I thought you might like to pour tea for me a little while," she said hesitatingly; "you could relieve Mrs. Estavi at five. That will give you plenty of time to change your dress."

"I shall not take time to change," Harriet assured her briskly. "I shall come down at once. I see there are a number of people here and I certainly shall not lose this opportunity to talk about the evils of smoking, tea and coffee."

"Wouldn't it be better to wait and do that at some meeting?" suggested Anne. "At strictly social affairs like this, we don't bring up debatable questions."

"That shows you are not really interested in great causes," said Harriet, brushing her hair back flatly from her high forehead. "I shall have no such scruples. I am conscious of the frivolity into which you have led Neal, but I shall try to counteract such an influence. As to meetings, I shall attend those, too, of course. In fact, I shall hold some here. I can see there is plenty of room for them in this large house which you have so extravagantly purchased, regardless of the fact that you already had a beautiful home in Hinsboro."

The first person whom Harriet approached on the subject near to her heart chanced to be Senator Lassiter. Immensely amused, he shepherded Harriet skillfully to the sun parlor and encouraged her to talk, conveying the impression that he agreed perfectly with everything she had to say. When, late in the afternoon, he was relieved by Neal, he left her with the happy idea that she had made a convert. The misleading philanthropist, however, wandered off in search of Anne, laughing softly and claiming a reward.

"What thanks do I get for helping you out?" he asked.

"No end of thanks," she said with a smile, as she leaned back in her chair.

"Ah—but I would like something concrete. Would you ride with me to-morrow morning or let me take you to a concert in the afternoon?"

"Neither. You know we went all over that thoroughly last spring. Blythe, after Neal went away. I won't play with fire."

MAKING THE TOWN CLEANER AND SAFER

Right now Spring is in the air, and nature, in her annual awakening, is doing her utmost to beautify this old world of ours. A little help on our part would not be amiss. In the Winter many things are neglected. Vacant lots, yards, and in some places even streets become somewhat unsightly. Now is the time for a thorough Spring cleaning, in the interest of better health, safety and improved appearance.

Such a clean-up campaign is a splendid activity in many communities, for Civic Clubs, Chambers of Commerce, or Boy Scouts to sponsor. One of them will have to assume the leadership, in some communities, in order to start the ball rolling, then obtain the co-operation of others. Streets and parkings should be cleared. Vacant lots, cleaned of rubbish, can be made into healthful playgrounds, parks or gardens. Not the least important phase of this work is the jobs it provides.

When a movement to clean-up, paint-up and beautify sweeps through the community, it leaves in its wake a healthier, safer and more sanitary town than it found. From the angle of fire safety alone, it is worth while. In this connection it is interesting to note that the National Board of Fire Underwriters reported that during the year 1932, rubbish and litter caused a fire loss of $1,200,000 throughout the United States. Let's beautify our communities—and save that money this year.

JOBS IN THE GROUND

There are thousands of potential jobs in the ground.

The jobs will be provided by the mining industry—as mining comes back. Not many years ago the mines were the greatest employers and taxpayers in a number of states. Their prosperity was responsible for the prosperity of agriculture, retailers, local industries of all kinds.

And the money they "created" went far beyond state borders, and made itself felt throughout the entire nation.

A mining revival would be a long step toward good times all over the United States.

A bridge expert advises that one should never criticize a partner, but adds in the same breath that he knows he is asking too much.

A knocking engine should have immediate attention, but a knocking man should be left severely alone.

If there are people on the moon, they have little to talk about, for there each day's weather is the same.

DEATH'S BUSY SEASON

As the summer approaches, with increased tourist and other automobile traffic, death prepares to reap its richest harvest. From the homes of the United States must come about 30,000 to die and a million others to be injured, some crippled for life, during the year, if former records are to be equaled.

This senseless slaughter goes on in spite of all the warnings given and in the face of the object lessons held daily before our eyes.

And the pitiful part of this continuous tragedy is that most of these casualties are entirely unnecessary, and might be prevented by the exercise of ordinary common sense. They are due entirely to an insane desire for speed or an utter disregard for the most elementary rules of safety. Many of the victims are helpless passengers, whose lives are at the mercy of criminally reckless or incompetent drivers. Some accidents are apparently unavoidable, of course, but in the vast majority of cases they are the result of pure carelessness on the part of motorists or pedestrians.

And even the most careful driver is often helpless when he encounters a fool on the street or highway.

HOOSIER LAWYERS

It may not be generally known that any voter of good moral character in the state of Indiana may engage in the practice of law, but such is the fact, owing to a provision in the state constitution.

Commenting on this strange provision, a leading attorney recently said: "While we have a bar in Indiana that is equal to that of any other state, it is not pre-eminent in the minds of the people." He recommended that the constitution be amended.

While the Indiana Bar Association admits only qualified lawyers, the fact that under the state constitution any citizen may practice law has long caused adverse comment and even ridicule from lawyers elsewhere.

Indiana has never been represented among all the seventy-six members of the Supreme Court of the United States who have served since the foundation of the government. It is believed that the peculiar provisions of its constitution with respect to lawyers has been largely responsible for this fact.

THE PATHS OF GLORY

Some two centuries ago Thomas Gray, in his immortal poem, "Elegy in a Country Churchyard," wrote: "The paths of glory lead but to the grave." Sometime the paths of glory lead to welcome obscurity even before the grave claims those who have been glorified.

A case in point is that of Maxine Elliott, now 61, who for thirty years was one of the world's most admired actresses, acclaimed by many as the most beautiful and accomplished woman on the stage. She abruptly quit her artistic career in 1920, and has since lived in Europe most of the time, having acquired an adequate fortune through stage appearances and subsequent shrewd investments.

Recently visiting her native land for the first time in nine years (she was born in Rockland, Maine) newspaper men sought interviews. She refused to reminisce about her career, but said:

"I never liked the theatre. I just happened to be in it. Night after night I played in successes. They became drearier and drearier. My idea of happiness is to find some small corner of the world, crawl into it, and never see my name in the papers until I die."

To the average mortal, who continually strives for reputation and public approval to the bitter end, Maxine Elliott's attitude will appear peculiarly strange.

TWO WOMEN HONORED

Highly pleasing is a bit of news from Florence, Italy, to the effect that gold medals have been awarded by that famous city to two American young women, Misses Mary and Janet Buttles, of Washington. They also received official commendation from the Italian government.

These marks of recognition came after several years of unselfish service in behalf of the poor children of Florence, for whom the two sisters established a nursery and training school, where working mothers could place them during the day.

Many hundreds of children have received care and instruction since this work was begun in 1925, and the high value placed upon this enterprise by the Italian authorities is indicated by the bestowal of the honors.

It was a noble impulse which prompted these young women to engage in such an undertaking, and it is good to know that their labors have received suitable recognition.

IRISH COINS

Very artistic designs mark the coins of the Irish Free State, which bear representations of members of the animal kingdom. Each of the various denominations has its distinctive emblem, but all have the same obverse, an Irish harp. The coins correspond in value to British money, the denominations and designs being as follows: Quarter-penny, a woodcock; half-penny, a sow with a litter of pigs; one penny, a hen with a brood of chicks; 3-pence, a hare; 6-pence, a wolfhound; one shilling, a bull; two shillings, a salmon; two shillings sixpence, a horse. Citizens of "the ould sod" no doubt take much pride in this, their first complete series of national coins.

It is said that many persons write merely for their own enjoyment. But why do they insist on having the stuff printed?

There are more than sixty million swine in the United States, not counting the road hogs.

FUTURE GAS WARFARE

It is evident that chemistry will play an important part in any future war. Any program of national preparedness which does not provide adequate means for meeting gas attacks and other forms of chemical warfare is sadly deficient in a branch of military activity which may prove of vital importance. And inasmuch as the best defence is a vigorous offensive, our forces should be prepared to carry the fight into the enemy's camp, in the event of another conflict.

While the use of poisonous gases is banned by the nations who were parties to the arms reduction conference held in 1922, similar agreements were in effect before the World war, yet they did not prevent the employment of these destructive agencies when the urge of necessity came. As a matter of fact, all the leading nations are today busy with the development of chemical war equipment, regardless of their pledges not to use it.

Dr. James F. Norris, former president of the American Chemical Society, sounded a note of warning on this subject when he said: "When the final pressure comes, a nation will use any means available to save its life." He urged that our army continue to study and develop the means of chemical warfare, with adequate appropriations for the purpose, as other armies are doing.

We do not want to see another war. We did not want to see the last one. But another war may come—is almost certain to come, sooner or later. We should make reasonable preparations to meet any emergency by developing every branch of modern warfare. To fail to do this would be to invite disaster, should war unhappily be forced upon this nation.

ONE LESSON OF THE DEPRESSION

That the public learned through the memorable depression years to be more discriminating; that people will demand quality and pay what they can afford; that the merchants of the nation have learned to be more considerate of the customers and to extend them a heartier welcome, are conclusions of a committee of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, which is considering, on a long-range basis, methods of appeal through advertising.

The phenomenal statements of earnings by the large distributors and decline in failures of small retailers to the lowest point in many years prove the soundness of the President's advice to business men when, upon signing the Recovery Act, he asked that "first consideration be given improvement of operating figures by increased sales." He reminded them that "the pent-up demand of the people is very great" and they "need not fear a lagging recovery," provided prices were not inflated beyond the actual margin of increased costs.

WAR ON TUBERCULOSIS

Although many more battles remain to be fought, it is encouraging to note the remarkable progress which has been made in the war against tuberculosis during the last thirty years, in which the death rate has been cut in half.

In 1904 there were only 9,107 beds available for the tuberculosis patients in hospitals and sanatoria in the United States, as compared with 73,695 beds at present.

Much of this advance is due to the good work of the National Tuberculosis Association during more than a quarter of a century of its existence. By emphasizing the need for rest, fresh air, sanitary living and working conditions, as well as the need for suitable institutions for the treatment of cases in their various stages, this association has made a wonderful contribution to the public welfare.

But there are still 500,000 cases of tuberculosis in the United States. The work of the association, supported by the sale of the Christmas Health Seals, must go on.

Medical authorities find that goiter is becoming more prevalent among young women. Possibly this discovery will discourage necking parties.

Numerous Fur Farms in United States and Canada

It may be surprising to many to be told that there are now nearly 5,000 fur farms in the United States and Canada, most of which have been established during the last fifteen years.

These farms represent an investment of around $25,000,000 and from them are now produced and marketed about 80,000 skins each year.

Thus it will be seen that a new and important industry is being developed, which embraces a practical conservation plan as well, just as the commercial raising of cattle and hogs has preserved these animals from extinction.

Another point in favor of fur farming is its humane aspect. Instead of being tortured for hours and even days in cruel traps, the fur farm animals may be instantaneously put to death when their pelts are needed for the market.

Women of the future may wear handsome furs without the feeling that they do so at the expense of frightful suffering on the part of the beautiful animals which contribute to their comfort and adornment.

THE PREVENTION OF FIRE ACCIDENTS IN THE HOME

Newspapers carry gruesome stories of children and adults burned to death in homes.

It is high time for spring cleaning of fire hazards. One of the most common and easiest eliminated is accumulation of trash in attics, cellars, barns and garages.

Wherever piles of rubbish paper and oily or paint soaked rags are tolerated, there is a constant invitation to fire through carelessly discarded matches, cigars and cigarettes, as well as spontaneous ignition. The first step in eliminating fire accidents, therefore, is a thorough clean-up of all trash.

Work with a paint brush is recommended, for a spic and span house seldom burns.

According to the National Board of Fire Underwriters, carelessness with matches and smoking materials is one of the greatest causes of fire ($30,000,000 in 1932). Continuation of high losses to life and property from this source is an absolute disgrace. Matches should be kept in non-burning containers and out of the reach of children; handy ash trays should be provided and common sense be exercised when using smoking materials and matches.

In spring, when heat is no longer needed, is the time to clean the heating plant, repair it if necessary, and get it ready for the next fall. Chimneys should be cleaned and inspected at this time.

Spring cleaning of fire hazards may require the services of others than yourself. All who thus employ workmen to help them, will be aiding the recovery program at a time when additional work for the unemployed is such a vital need. Do your part!

HIS ONE REGRET

She insisted on taking innumerable frocks with her, and they arrived at the station loaded with luggage.

"I wish," said the husband thoughtfully, "that we'd brought the piano."

"You needn't try to be sarcastic," came the frigid reply. "It's not a bit funny."

"I'm not trying to be funny," he explained, sadly. "I left the tickets on it."

One cogent reason for giving up smoking is advanced by Emma Goldman, the famed anarchist. She says that the first time she went to jail she found it most painful to be deprived of tobacco and that inasmuch as she never was sure when she would go to jail again, she decided it best to give up the habit altogether.

To eliminate removing the dust-pans except when it is filled, a carpet sweeper is equipped with a window or transparent top so the housewife will know when it is time to empty the container.

THE BALL PUT

By BRUTUS HAMILTON
University of California Track Coach.
Olympic Games Competitor in 1920-21.

One should always try for smoothness and rhythm in the ball put. The best puts are the least effortful, because timing and co-ordination have permitted the athlete to maximize his possibilities. Therefore, timing and co-ordination are the most important factors in this event, assuming that the athlete has the necessary physical qualifications.

From the very start the athlete should strive to get his power to flow smoothly into the ball. Momentum is gathered as the athlete glides across the circle, but it should be done without jerks and with the weight of the body under control at all times.

The hips play a very essential part in all throwing events, and the ball put is no exception. The athlete should always strive to get the hips into the put and to time this hip throw with the various other phases of the event. If the athlete is having difficulty with the timing of his hip throw, he should report to a coach and get his faults pointed out.

Let us take an athlete through the event. He begins by standing at the back of the circle, facing East, assuming he is throwing North. His position as he stands there should be relaxed and easy. The shot should be held well up on the fingers and the elbow not down to side but away from the body and pointing to an imaginary spot approximately ten feet to the rear. The left arm should be slightly bent and relaxed and held about head high, pointing approximately in the direction of the throw. The elbow should come through directly behind the path of the ball.

As the athlete prepares to glide across the circle, the weight is transferred to the right foot, and the left foot is raised forward and then slowly drawn back and tucked in behind the right foot. As the athlete draws the left leg back, he crouches down on his right foot and begins to fall forward. As he starts his glide, his left foot is brought forward again with knee flexed. The right foot lands slightly before the left foot, with the right toe pointing to the right oblique. The left foot should be on a line slightly to the left of the right foot, but the left hip should be in a plane with the right hip, pointing directly in the line of the throw. It is important that the athlete should not have his body forward over the hips, but rather back, with the weight directly over the right foot. From this position the athlete makes his final delivery, or reverse.

It is important that the elbow be not raised too high, and that the body be not permitted to get ahead of the shot. In this way the athlete's hips aid in driving the ball forward. As the shot is delivered with the final wrist snap, and with the palm of the hand pointing away from the athlete, the reverse is executed which permits the athlete to follow the ball for the maximum distance and yet not make a foul throw.

STUDY DIET TO PREVENT ANEMIA

Copper and Iron in System Is Good Insurance.

By EDITH M. BARBER

ANEMIA is a disease which is much less common than it was a generation ago. For its decrease we can give credit to the general improvement in diet.

People generally are eating more foods which are naturally rich in iron, which is necessary for the hemoglobin of the blood. This hemoglobin is responsible for carrying the oxygen which our body needs in order to utilize the food we eat. It has been recently found that we need a tiny bit of copper in order to make use of the iron. Fortunately, nature has provided many of our foods with the proper portions of these two minerals. Liver is perhaps the best example of this combination. It is interesting to note that two foods, which we often eat together, supplement each other in this respect—tomatoes give us copper and lettuce gives us iron.

Foods, which are particularly valuable in furnishing material for building up hemoglobin are liver and kidney, lean meat, egg yolk, oysters, peas and beans, whole grains, bran and green vegetables. The common vegetables—potatoes, cabbage and carrots—are good sources of iron. Among the fruits, pineapple, oranges, grapefruit, prunes, raisins, apples, strawberries, apricots, and peaches are valuable.

In anemic conditions great care must be taken to keep the intestines active, as constipation seems to interfere with the absorption of iron. Fortunately, the foods which contain iron are, at least most of them, stimulating to intestinal action.

Scalloped Oysters.

- 1 pint oysters
- 1/4 cup oyster liquor
- 2 tablespoons milk
- 1 cup dry bread crumbs
- 1/2 cup rolled cracker crumbs
- 1/2 cup melted butter
- Salt
- Pepper

Mix cracker and bread crumbs with the milk. Put a thin layer in the bottom of a baking dish, cover with oysters, sprinkle with salt and pepper and add half the milk and oyster liquor. Repeat and cover top with remaining crumbs. Bake thirty minutes in a hot oven (450 degrees F.).

Spinach Ring.

- 1/2 peck spinach
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 1 tablespoon grated onion
- 1/2 cup milk
- 3 eggs, separated
- Pepper and salt
- 1/2 teaspoon nutmeg

Wash, pick over and cook spinach until tender, about ten minutes. Drain and chop or put through meat grinder. Heat butter, stir in flour, then the milk. When smooth and thick, stir gradually into the beaten egg yolks. Add spinach and seasoning, grated onion and nutmeg. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites of eggs, place in a well-greased ring or melon mold, set in a pan half filled with boiling water, and bake twenty minutes in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.) or until set. When ready to serve loosen edges, turn carefully on hot platter. Place

Routine Jobs Held

Boosting Suicides

Washington.—The ever-increasing suicide rate can be, at least partially, attributed to routine jobs which are unsatisfactory and wearisome, according to Dr. William A. White, professor of psychiatry at George Washington university and superintendent of St. Elizabeth's hospital here.

The dreary side of industrial civilization, he asserts, turns humans into mere cogs in a gigantic machine from which condition they derive no sense of satisfaction.

Doctor White contrasts the pride of workmanship and the sense of fulfillment of the skilled artisan of old with the position of the present-day industrial worker who has no fundamental interest in his work.

He declares that society must change its methods of preparing individuals to meet these new conditions and urges that in the course of his lifetime each individual develop a "vital interest" to keep him going in the face of bitter discouragement.

My Neighbor Says:

DRIED beans and peas make very good puree, but care must be taken to soak and boil them for a sufficiently long time. When they have boiled until they are very tender mash them through a sieve. Place them in the saucepan and stir into them enough hot milk, pepper and salt to season them, add butter and a little sugar before serving.

When cutting quilt blocks, make a pattern out of a good ink blotter. When placed on the material, it will stick to the goods and not slide around as paper does.

Scald and dry your orange peels and grind them into a coarse powder. This can be used to flavor cakes, sauces, puddings, etc. Lemon peels can be used the same way.

Instead of cutting a paper for the bird cage each morning, cut six or eight papers, place them in the bird cage and each morning remove the top one.

Movement of Earth Is Revealed at Institute

Philadelphia.—Visual proof that the earth rotates is given by a device now on display at the Franklin Institute.

The machine, made by Leopold Pessel, Philadelphia, was donated to the institute by Mr. and Mrs. Richard L. Binder, Philadelphia. It consists of a thin steel cable, 85 feet long, weighing but nine pounds, and a pendulum. Dr. Howard McClenahan, director of the institute, said that the device, known as a Foucault pendulum, is the only means by which the effect of the earth's rotation can be actually demonstrated.

A steel shell, also contributed by the Binders, was attached to the bob of the pendulum, which hangs from the roof skylight to the basement.

Actual evidence of the earth's movement is shown in the "pull" influenced on the pendulum after it is set in motion in a north-south swing at right angles to the spinning of the earth. The bob moves gradually until it develops an arc, east and west, or parallel with globular rotation. Then, with no more "pull" being exerted, the machine continues to swing. This process requires about nine hours and proceeds at the rate of about ten degrees an hour.

Helpful Hint

Grease spilled on a hardwood kitchen floor may be quickly removed by pouring kerosene over the spot. When the kerosene evaporates, the grease spot will have disappeared.

The Lambs club, which recently held its annual gambol at the Waldorf-Astoria with George M. Cohen as coille, was born in London away back in 1809 when several congenial actors got together and formed the organization. Five years later, Harry Montague came to America and formed the American club which now has its fold on West Forty-fourth street and the roster of which includes the great names in theatrical history as well as the great names of today. The annual gambols date back to 1888. The summer outings, known as washings, began in 1875 and continued until war days. Then there was a break until 1922. The washing that year was held on the estate of John Golden at Bayside, L. I., and has been held there every year since. The Lambs club barred the ladies from the start and is one of the few organizations to still keep that rule in force.

Hard times, felt with especial severity by the theaters, of course affected the Lambs club and there were months when it looked as if the ancient organization would have to surrender to the sheriff. But heroic measures were adopted, experts in finance volunteered their services, many members made severe sacrifices and the Lambs pulled through. In that respect they were more fortunate than the brother organization, the Friars, which came into existence in 1906 and in October last year was forced to give up its monastic clubhouse. The Friars now meet in a loft building.

Ita, Lily Pons' pet jaguar, is now in a cage in the Bronx zoo. Ita was given to the opera singer in Rio de Janeiro 19 months ago and is now twenty months old. Affectionate with her mistress and her household, though a bit intolerant of strangers, Ita followed Miss Pons about her home, on trains and in hotels to Miss Pons' delight but frequently to the consternation of onlookers. But Ita grew up and got a bit dangerous. So recently, Miss Pons took Ita in her car and drove from her Central Park West apartment up to the zoo. There she turned Ita over to Head Keeper John Toomey and went home and cried a little. And at the zoo, Ita was classified by Max Lindsberry, keeper of the small mammal house, as an ocelot and not a jaguar.

One day, looking through the Manhattan telephone directory, the name Bombatement company, caught my eye. Made up my mind to find out what it was. Now the World-Telegram has done it for me. The Bombatement company is a concern that does not advertise. In fact, it avoids publicity whenever possible. Known to every trade organization in the city, it is impossible to get in touch with Harry Mooney, its head, unless there is positive identification. The Bombatement company specializes in neutralizing the effect of stench bombs. Hence the secrecy that surrounds it.

The start of the business was in a way an accident. Stench bombs attacked a grocery owned by one of Mr. Mooney's friends. He picked up some of the crystals, analyzed them and experimented until he found a neutralizing agent. While he was treating the grocery, a policeman clattered him and charged him with having returned to complete the wrecking job. Mr. Mooney succeeded in demonstrating to the officer what he was really doing. The next day a restaurant on the cop's beat was bombed and he called up Mr. Mooney. Then the company formed.

One of the big transatlantic lines will do away with tipping on cruises to be conducted in the future. From 5 to 10 per cent, depending on accommodations occupied, will be added to the total cost of the cruise to cover all gratuities, the theory being that the employees will render better service because the uncertainty of return will be eliminated. The same scheme was tried here years ago in some restaurants. But it didn't work out as it does on the Continent—the waiters not only getting the 10 per cent but tips also.

HOW IT STARTED

By JEAN NEWTON

That Word "Pickaninny"

IT IS sometimes good for the soul to find that something we have regarded as original with us or peculiarly our own considerably pre-dates our own existence and in parts and places far removed from our own little circle on this earth!

That happens with the word "pickaninny" which most of us regard as an Americanism for negro children.

Many people are uncertain about it, wondering whether the little colored child would resent it as the modern enlightened negro naturally resents the term "nigger."

The fact is that "pickaninny" is a word in good standing, meaning simply a "small child." Its derivation is from the Spanish "pequeno" meaning "little, young," or the Portuguese "pequeno" of which it is a diminutive! The chances are that the term had its introduction into this country by way of Cuba.

ENDURING SENTIMENT

I HAVE been given permission to print this especially touching letter from a man:

"Dear Mrs. Post—I lost my beloved wife a year ago. The tragedy of this separation of two people who for nearly thirty years were so happy to be together, is just something that only those who are struggling to endure this same aching loneliness can know. Lately I have gotten a great deal of comfort in an idea that may, or may not, be my own; at any rate it was new so far as my ever having heard about it was concerned.

"My wife and I were married with the double ring ceremony. And when she died her wedding band was never taken off her finger. A few months ago it occurred to me to take her engagement ring with my own wedding band to the jeweler and ask him whether he could build up the top of my ring so that he could sink the diamond of her ring into it, without changing the under half of my ring or obliterating the engraving of our names. He said he could by melting a little more gold at the top of my band, which he did, and the post-setting looks like a conventional gypsy hoop and is not a clumsy or obvious one.

"A friend of mine told me that I was selfish to use the stone, especially as I had the gold brought over the edge to make it look smaller. My friend says it should be given to our son for him to give to his future wife. But he has no present intention of marrying and I am getting a real consolation in having something that she always wore and held dear, constantly close to me. It is not too late to pass the composite ring on to my son even now, or later, and he can have all the other jewels that his mother had any time he wants them.

"Am I just a silly sentimentalist, or do you think that this same plan would give other lonely widowers the real comfort that it gives me? It was not just a diamond to her, and I could not bear to leave it in hiding when I had looked at it for all those years in its rightful place on her hand. Perhaps if you haven't heard of the plan, you might want to print it with your answer for the benefit of some other sentimental reader—if there might be one."

In answer I want to say that of course I can understand how you feel and I think it is a beautiful idea that is likely to bring a little warmth of comfort not only to one, but to many. In no possible sense are you selfish. As for sentiment—what is beauty of life without it?

WRITING MATERIALS

WRITING Paper for Men: Good taste expects that stationery for all men be very conservative. Color of writing paper: White, cream, the deeper shades of blue, or any of the grayish mixtures known as granite. (Plain gray is better for an older man than for a young one). Smartest style of paper: Either bond or Irish linen or granite. Any other plain paper with cut edges, proper Size: Large rather than small. Size: Double sheet 5 1/2 x 8 1/2 inches in best taste. Single sheet slightly larger. Unlined envelopes with plainest flap. Stamp: Address or block initials, or full name and address. (Mr is never included under any circumstances). A man's business address is put on the face of the envelope rather than on the flap. Personal paper has the address (if any) across the flap. Color of stamping (or printing): black or blue or gray or brick red. Ink: Blue or black.

Writing Paper for Women: White, cream, all blues, grays and mauves. Very pale powder pink bond paper is just on the edge of possibility but to be avoided by the unknowing. I wish I might approve of green but I really can't. Size: Very small or medium large, single or double sheets. Very smart is the double sheet of paper that fits without further folding into a big envelope. Texture of paper unlimited, but cut edges are more conventional than rough. Any colored border fashionable—even green or red—if it be very narrow, but gilt or silver edges tabu. Stamping: Monogram, initials or address in color to match the border. A girl's name—either "Mary Smith" in full or "Mary," embossed in color is popular for a young girl when writing to her own friends. On paper for social use the address without the name is proper on the flap of the envelope as well as on the paper—of if the monogram or name is stamped on paper the address is often put across the flap of the envelope. Envelope lined with plain tissue to match the color of the stamping (and border) or no lining. Avoid violently patterned envelope things except for Christmas cards. Ink: Black, neutral, tint, blue, violet. (Green and red are tabu).

For Impersonal or Business Letters: Printed name in full prefixed by "Mrs." or "Miss" is proper. And this same complete name with address on the envelope flap.

For formal paper, die stamping on good quality of paper is of course in best taste.

School Vacation Date Changes Are Advocated

Following a two years campaign by health authorities, business groups and the State Chamber of Commerce, definite headway is finally being made in changing the school vacation dates of the Bay region to conform with those of the rest of California and the United States.

All other schools, universities and colleges of the state have opened their Fall term the early weeks of September. Bay region schools and the University of California have opened their Fall term the early part or the middle of August, according to the travel stimulation committee of the State Chamber. It is pointed out that this has thrown the peak load of all vacation periods for families among business firms in the Bay area in July, as well as crowding an overload on the resorts during this short time. The State Chamber and others have advocated opening the Fall term in September, and adding two to three weeks to the summer vacation period. This would add the full month of August to vacation programs.

Following are the results reported to date by the travel stimulation committee of the State Chamber of Commerce: All East Bay schools will close on June 8 as set last year. The Alameda schools will not open this Fall, however, until the first week in September. Berkeley and Albany school boards have adopted the same schedule for 1934, and it is understood that the same schedules will be recommended to the Piedmont, Oakland and Richmond boards with favorable action resulting.

It is reported that the San Francisco school board has taken action against any change this year. The University of California, it is stated, is taking under advisement a change of setting back the dates of the mid-term opening from January 1 to January 15, which automatically would allow them gradually to work out a co-ordination of dates with the East Bay schools in the summer closing and fall opening dates.

The headway that has been gained, however, is hailed, according to the travel stimulation committee of the State Chamber, as a great contribution, not alone to business firms and resorts, but to students, parents and teachers as well. The year 1934 will start a new vacation era in California.

A BILLION DOLLARS AND A MILLION JOBS

It is estimated that there is in this country $1,000,000,000 of idle capital which would normally be used in the mortgage market for residential building.

If, as is hoped, present efforts loosen these funds and bring building back near normal, close to a million men will find jobs. They will have regular incomes, after years in which most of them have been finding the going extremely hard. They will have money to spend for necessities and luxuries—and that money will go through a thousand and one industries, buying materials and supplies and services, paying taxes and interest, creating more jobs and building up payrolls for all types of workers.

That is what construction revival will do for the country generally. In its individual application, so far as the property-owner is concerned, it will likewise do this: Boom building costs. They have been rising slowly, but steadily, since the low reached last summer. They are still far below normal—as a matter of fact, costs of most materials used in building have lagged behind the general commodity price advance. That means that the millions of citizens who have money with which to build and repair now, before this belated boom starts, can still get a whole lot more than a dollar's worth for every dollar spent. And that condition isn't going to last much longer, unless all present signs point the wrong way.

Build now, repair now, renovate now. That motto will aid you in doing your bit toward achieving recovery—and will figuratively put money in your pocket.

Should Punish Guilty, But Don't Hamstring Innocent

Col. D. C. Jackling, who is responsible for the production of more copper than any living man; holder of the most coveted medals of the engineering and mining world and the United States Distinguished Service Medal; builder of towns and communities in waste spaces, says in regard to stock exchange control bill now before Congress:

"Don't scuttle the ship simply to get rid of the rats."

In an interview in the Salt Lake Tribune, Mr. Jackling said: "This legislation is actually designed to control industry down to the very lowest unit that uses the corporate form of organization. The effect of this legislation will be harder on the little fellow than on the big fellow."

"This is like scuttling the ship to get rid of the rats."

"The fundamental target at which the proposed legislation is aimed is the clamping of a federal, bureaucratic halter on all industries, both large and small."

"In the legislation, as proposed, the regulation of security exchanges is academic. The primary effect will be to destroy the very foundation of industrial securities."

Mr. Jackling declared that the legislation would place control of all business in a politically appointed bureau without knowledge of business and with its sole objective political aggrandizement and perpetuation in office.

"Let's get down to primary factors," he said. "This legislation means an attempted destruction of the American way of doing business—the method which has made the United States the greatest industrial nation, the richest and happiest nation in the world. That's what the people ought to think about."

Mr. Jackling is a typical self-made American business man. The properties he heads employ thousands of men and pay hundreds of thousands of dollars in taxes. It is just possible he knows a little about the subject of which he speaks.

A WINCONSIN STAR

One of the scholastic stars of the young generation is Miss Mary Willis of Wisconsin, whose attainments were described in a recent news item, which noted that she had received her master of arts degree at the age of eighteen and was soon to become a full-fledged Ph. D.

Her precocity was manifested early, and when only eighteen months old she knew most of the better known nursery rhymes and several poems. She began her formal education at the age of four and read much standard literature, including "Pilgrim's Progress," some Shakespeare, the Bible, a book of ancient history and other works before she was six; finished grammar school at the age of nine and was graduated from high school at thirteen as valedictorian of her class. Her college training was received at the University of Wisconsin.

Miss Willis is the daughter of Preston Willis, high school principal of her home town, to whose guidance in her early years her rapid advancement is no doubt largely due.

While her scholarship is not unprecedented for one of her age, it is most unusual, and with continued application in some congenial field of effort she should go far.

George Washington may have been entirely truthful, but he never had to make any circulation statements for a sorry newspaper.

PUPILS DISCUSS TIMELY SUBJECTS

Following is the full text of addresses delivered by high school students at the celebration held in the Jefferson Union high school auditorium on Wednesday evening of Public Schools Week:

EDUCATION

By ANITA MOONEY

There is an old saying that education is no burden to carry, which is very true. I have also heard it said that the more we learn the more we realize how little we really know.

A few decades ago a person was considered fortunate if he were able to obtain as much as a grammar school education. Today the majority of boys and girls are able to go through college with little physical effort on their part. Lack of facilities in the field of learning was responsible for the scarcity of education in years gone by. Schools were not so numerous as they are today and the student had to travel many miles, rain or shine, to attend. This was in the days of the "little red school house." Of course, calling them such was purely rhetorical, since most school houses were really old barns without proper lighting or warmth. They were small buildings and often six or seven grades were crowded into one room. The "school marm" more than earned her meager wage. In some parts of the country, there were no schools at all and the only learning that a child received was what his mother or father was able to give him.

In spite of the obstacles in the way of our forebearers, some of them were highly cultured and educated people. If we students of today were suddenly thrust back into those eras gone by, we would feel as though we were being persecuted. Just imagine walking six or seven miles to school through dense forests and over narrow paths during wet, cold weather. Well, those gallant ancestors of ours did, and they did what is considered a day's work before leaving. They had their cows to milk, their cattle to feed, or their fields to plow. I'm afraid that if such were the case today, many of the students would insist on remaining ignorant.

However, it was the hardships endured by our forebearers that made them strive for better schooling conditions. They had the foresight to see into the future the great metropolises that are spread over the country today. They realized that it was education that we needed to plan and build great institutions. Their efforts were successful, for today we have every advantage over them. And yet how few of us fully appreciate them.

Would you consider a person with a grammar school education alone, sufficiently educated and prepared to go out in the world during these days of such keen competition? Would they be as well suited to face conditions as a person who had received the benefits of learning? Yet, here in our own school there are students who would willingly give up their opportunities to join the army of the unfit. How few realize that we are the future leaders of the country and that it is education that is going to make us progressive leaders. Secretary Ickes said that education is the foundation of our civilization and should that foundation crumble our nation would be in danger.

Today, educational institutions are spread throughout the country, and they offer every modern convenience possible. The teachers are men and women who have spent their lives obtaining a thorough knowledge of their subjects. The rooms are large and healthful, and the cost of attending school is small considering the benefits that can be derived. However, a person cannot consider himself educated merely because he sits in a classroom; there are other requirements. Students should delve into the books supplied by the libraries and schools; they should read about the works and deeds of men who have made their mark in the world. There are men who have made invaluable imprints on the life of today, and without a knowledge of their worldly achievements, we cannot hope to plan successfully for the future progress of the country. A person cannot be an authority on a subject if he does not know its beginning and former history; it is books that supply this knowledge.

Despite the advantages and opportunities offered students today, there are not as many truly cultured and educated men and women as there should be. The fault does not lie with the instructors or the school; it lies with the students themselves—lack of application.

Now, educators all over the country have determined that there is something that can be done to inspire students to apply themselves more diligently. That something is having the parents interested in their children's school work. For this reason, a week known as Public Schools Week is being set aside in every city, town, and hamlet in which the parents are urged to visit the schools. In this way, the parents are given the opportunity to become acquainted with the teachers, to know just what their children are doing during the day, and to become familiar with the different subjects. This in turn will give the parents and the students something in common.

Thomas Jefferson said: "Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, our schools and means of education shall forever be encouraged." Now, with co-operation on the part of the parents, students, and instructors, our generation can not help but achieve those accomplishments that the nation as a whole is striving for—that is, better education and a higher civilization.

WORLD PEACE

By ERNEST EVERETT

The people of the United States are a peace-loving people whose only desire is for peace and security and a chance to earn an honest living. But merely being a peace-loving people will not keep us out of the next world war. Because foreign affairs today are our affairs and the actions of other countries concern our foreign business. Time and growth have changed this once small country of a million people into one of the greatest countries of the world—a leader among nations—one who has foreign business and trade in all parts of the globe.

Today if two or more nations enter into a conflict, we have to protect our foreign business to see that it is not interfered with. If it is, we soon find ourselves head and shoulders in a conflict which at first was of no concern of ours. This is the problem which today faces all nations of the world. What with the hatreds existing between countries, the social unrest in France and Austria, and the still unsettled dispute between China and Japan, the spark of war may be set off at any time.

We not only have to protect our soldiers, young men in the prime of life, but our helpless women and children who remain at home. For modern warfare, with its bombs, blockades, and poisonous gases, can completely wipe out entire populations.

How can we protect ourselves against this evil? Where is the answer for everlasting peace?

Does it lie in overloading our country with armaments, and taxing our already over-burdened people to provide a large army and navy? No, this would not be called preparing for everlasting peace, but in turn be called paving the way for future warfare. For while we are building this great army and navy, what will other countries of the world be doing? Will they be talking about the weather? or how lovely the moon looks? No, they will be trying to outbuild us. There will be a general struggle to see which country can produce the largest army and navy. While this is going on the presses of each country will be producing untrue propaganda to make the people of each country see the reason for having more abundant armament. A good example of what unjust propaganda can do is the hatred which now exists between Japan and China.

If armaments are not the answer for everlasting peace, where does the answer lie?

It might lie in the United States entering the League of Nations, but many people are opposed to this. They say the members of the league will not keep their promises. They use as proof of this, the fact that leading members refused to pay their war debts when they had the money. They also say that the League of Nations is breaking up. But this is not so; only Japan and Germany have withdrawn from the League. It is quite possible that the United States, by entering this organization, would be able to help bring about complete co-operation between nations. Once all nations began to work under the rules of the League, they would be able to isolate any other nation which tried to settle a dispute with armaments instead of by arbitration.

If we cannot bring ourselves to join the League of Nations, our only hope lies in teaching the younger generations the wastefulness of modern warfare—that warfare no longer has glory in it, and that it can completely undo the work of man through the ages by destroying civilization. And maybe some time in the future the present younger generation will be able to work out a plan that will protect the world against warfare.

Lumber Production Up 58 Percent Over 1933

Lumber production in the United States during the first quarter of 1934 was 58 per cent higher than during the first quarter of 1933, as reported by the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, and shipments were 23 per cent heavier. New business increased 23 per cent. Orders received at saw-mills exceeded production by 3 per cent, with orders well above output in all soft-wood areas except the West coast and California redwood, the total average soft-wood excess of orders over production being 4 per cent. Hardwood orders were 3 per cent below production.

During the final week of the quarter, shipments totaling 202,484,000 feet, from 1,473 mills, was the highest of any week this year.

As is usual in a campaign year, a lot of people will be so busy talking politics that they will probably forget to register.

Five whooping cranes, a species nearly extinct, are reported to have wintered on the coastal prairies of Texas.

MINING NOTES

Favorable reports were received in Vancouver last week concerning the operations of the Cariboo Mountain Gold Mines and officials of the company are enthusiastic over the location on the vein in the exploratory tunnel, which was driven to provide haulage way for future operations. The tunnel, which was driven during the winter, along a fault, has established that the vein, where intersected by the driveway, has a width between walls of eighteen feet.

According to reports received at the San Francisco headquarters of the Gold Mining Association of America, the gold mining code meeting at Denver on May 18-19 will be the largest assemblage of gold producers, gold developers and mining operators ever held in the United States. Large delegations are being announced from the western states and more than a score of state associations throughout California will be represented.

News has been received in Seattle, in a letter from J. A. Walsh, who is prospecting a quartz claim on Sheep Creek near Atlin, B. C., that the snow is getting soft and work is progressing with great rapidity. A tunnel through promising ore has been driven eighty feet and is already one hundred and fifty feet below the surface. The tunnel is expected to be completed in June.

Things are certainly moving along at a lively tempo in mining affairs in this section of Alaska at the present time, says an Eagle, Alaska, correspondent, and to paraphrase that old saying of "wars and rumors of wars" to fit the situation here, it is "dredges and rumors of dredges." The Walker's Fork Gold Corporation, of which H. F. Cowden is the head, has moved in and is installing a modern dredge on the Walker's Fork property and expects to have it in operation this coming summer.

The March net profit before charges from the Alaska Juneau's operations during the month of March was $203,500, according to the monthly estimates compiled at San Francisco and issued at Juneau by J. A. Williams, acting superintendent.

Alaska is snapping back to form, says the Cordova Times. The giant young territory is hitting a great stride. The year 1934 is seeing a turn of affairs that will make it the marker of the turn of the tide. The good news comes from every quarter. Mining camps are echoing with new activities under the impetus of the higher price of gold. Mining engineers are beginning to come into the territory seeking opportunities to acquire properties for investors. Local prospectors are outfitting and planning to get into the hills. Interior arrivals report more outfits being sold than for years.

National Lottery Proposed With Rake-off for Treasury

The present frantic efforts to raise more money for governmental purposes have given rise to the serious suggestion that a Federal lottery be established with a rake-off for the benefit of the national treasury.

To most persons this proposal will probably seem immoral and absurd today, yet in the early years of our national existence public lotteries were very common. Prior to 1820 no less than seventy lotteries were authorized by Congress.

The Continental Congress in 1776 conducted a lottery to raise money for the Revolutionary Army; President Washington approved a lottery for building a part of the national capital; Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, Williams and Columbia universities were supported in part by lotteries in early days and innumerable lotteries were openly and legally conducted for various other charitable and educational enterprises.

Most European governments have at one time or another employed national lotteries as a means of raising funds for their public treasuries. Cuba has conducted a national lottery since the foundation of the republic.

The foregoing facts are cited, not as an argument for a national lottery at the present time, but merely to show that what would now be considered a most immoral proceeding was in earlier times looked upon as an entirely proper means of raising public funds.

March Gasoline Tax is $4,048,511.61
Exceeding the figure for any month of 1933, March gasoline taxes reached a total of $4,048,511.61, according to an announcement made by Richard E. Collins, of Redding, chairman of the State Board of Equalization. This marks an increase over the tax for the same month of last year amounting to $794,594.33, or a gain of 24.4 per cent.

March Beverage Tax is $119,113.24
Beer and wine are gaining in favor as beverages, despite availability of hard liquors, according to tax statistics completed by the State Board of Equalization. March assessments of the two cents per gallon beverage tax as made by the board amount to $119,113.24, which is the largest figure for any month since the tax became effective a year ago.

Auto Workers' Output At September, '29, Level

Production of cars and also number of workers employed by members of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce reached the highest level during March of any month since September, 1929, according to the Chamber's announcement, which more than confirms all private reporting agencies.

Production was 206 per cent above March, 1933, and 49 per cent above February, 1934. The March output totaled 262,156 units. Production for the first three months of 1934 was 539,128 cars, an increase of 84 per cent over the first quarter of last year.
